

An Associates degree in Financial Services offers you a basic foundation in the realm of finance.

Your coursework will touch on general liberal arts topics such as literature, mathematics, and social sciences, but the majority will focus on introducing you to the financial elements of the business world. You will study essential business disciplines such as accounting, management, business law, and marketing. The development of solid written and oral communications skill, as well as qualities of leadership and teamwork will also be addressed. However, the majority of your business studies will focus on teaching you the principles of finance. You will learn the essentials of investing, tax services, financial planning, insurance, and budget management. This degree will provide you with a basic foundation in how to present yourself professionally in the business world, as well as how businesses function – especially in the financial aspects. The coursework centers more on introductory material than on in-depth study, but will still provide you with a significant body of information to build upon. This major will prepare you for: An Associate's of Arts in Financial Services is the first step in making yourself marketable in the finance industry. Entry-level jobs become available to you in the following areas: financial analyst, investment advisor, financial manager, and as a financial services sales agent. A number of opportunities to further your education are also available. The first step would be to continue your education and pursue a Bachelor's in finance. Doing so will afford you more in-depth knowledge of the various aspects of the financial services industry.
